Adults are responsible for reporting abuse

When any adult has reason to suspect that a child is being or has been abused, he or she has a moral (and often legal) responsibility to report suspicions to civil authorities. Reporting suspected abuse takes courage. Adults who take a stand for children and make the call are often responsible for saving a child from terrible torment. Learn more about how to identify and report suspected abuse by reading chapter 9.8.1 of the Administrative Handbook for the Archdiocese of Los Angeles. Thirdhand Smoke: A Lingering Effect

You undoubtedly know about secondhand tobacco smoke, even though there is less of it these days because fewer people smoke in public. But do you know what thirdhand smoke is? It's the residue that tobacco smoke leaves in rooms—on furniture, carpets, walls, and clothing, and in dust. It's the lingering unpleasant odor in the homes of smokers or in hotel rooms where people smoked hours or even days earlier. It penetrates and clings to surfaces and is hard to get rid of even with a fan. The odor means you're inhaling tobacco-related compounds.

Even when the odor is gone, many of the hundreds of carcinogens and other toxic chemicals in tobacco smoke stay on surfaces and, when disturbed, can become airborne again.

The term thirdhand smoke was coined nearly a decade ago, and research—some done by scientists at the Lawrence Berkeley National Laboratory—has been going strong since then. It has found that tobacco substances absorbed by surfaces can react with ozone and other household air pollutants to form additional dangerous compounds (such as nitrosamines) and be discharged into the air as vapor or ultrafine particles or else hitch a ride on dust particles.

Smoke that sticks around

The latest research from the Lawrence Berkeley National Laboratory appeared online in Environmental Science & Technology in November 2014. It looked at levels of particulate matter and dozens of easily vaporized organic compounds (such as acetaldehyde, benzene, and toluene) for 18 hours after smoking (by machine) had taken place in a room-sized chamber. Testing was also done in a smoker's home.

Based on the results, the researchers estimated that health harms would be greatest during the first 10 hours after the last cigarette was smoked and then would start to level off (though not disappear even after 18 hours). The most significant damage would come from ultrafine particles, which—like vapor—can be inhaled deep into the lungs.

One complicating factor in trying to quantify the risks is that it's hard to draw the line between secondhand and thirdhand smoke—there's a gradual transition as smoke dissipates. Much of the harm—and some of the 50,000 annual deaths in the U.S.—attributed to secondhand smoke are actually caused by thirdhand smoke, according to the Lawrence Berkeley scientists.

As knowledge of the dangers of thirdhand smoke grows, it should certainly encourage even more places to go smoke-free and more smokers to quit.
